Introduction
- - - - -

11. (C) The government continued low-intensity fighting during the first full week in June with pockets of militants in Swat, Buner, Shangla, and Lower Dir. The latter showed that they pose a continued threat by destroying schools in Lower Dir and Buner, and resuming kidnappings of civilians in Swat. In Frontier Region Bannu, adjacent to North Waziristan, the military has begun operations against militants affiliated with Baitullah Mehsud's Tehrik-i-Taliban Pakistan (TTP). The response from militants to the government campaign continued apace, however, as the TTP killed more than a dozen and wounded scores of people in a high-profile vehicle-borne suicide attack (refs C, E) at the Pearl Continental (PC) Hotel in Peshawar on June 9. TTP and other militants also launched several smaller-scale attacks in Peshawar and Darra Adam Khel (ref B).

12. (SBU) International organizations suspended their activities in Peshawar after the bombing of the PC Hotel on June 9. The United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), the World Food Program (WFP), and several other international bodies temporarily halted their activities by directing workers to restrict their movements (ref D). The WFP said it would continue serving the needs of IDPs in Malakand Division. Slow commerce and a bleak mood continued in Peshawar.

13. (C) In Dir, two noteworthy developments occurred over the reporting period. A suicide bombing in Upper Dir spurred the formation of a lashkar to fight militants there, who were routed in the ensuing campaign (ref F). In Lower Dir, imprisoned leaders of Tehrik-i-Nifaz-i-Shariat-i-Mohammedi (TNSM) died during an apparent attempt to free them from the military forces moving them to Peshawar (ref A).

14. (U) Militants have killed over 600 Pakistani soldiers in the last year, according to the Army's lead spokesman. Athar Abbas said on June 11 that 1,700 Pakistani soldiers have died since September 11, 2001.
